

Emergency Medicine Physician Jobs

It is all over the internet. They need you in the emergency room. It's exciting to be an emergency physician. You get to be one of the first physicians in the hospital to see the patients and they will depend on you for their survival. You have that first contact with the patients and they will be crying to you for help. They will be telling you everything that is on their mind if they are conscious enough to talk to you. The nature of the job is that you will be the first person that they will see. It can be good or bad. There will be times that you won't have a problem treating the patient and then there will be time that the patient will die in the ER room. It's traumatizing to see people die in front of your eyes. This is why emergency physicians need to be mentally prepared for the worst case scenario. You will see a lot of trauma and drama. It might stick with you when you go home. You might even think about a case five months from now when you are on your vacation in Hawaii. You might be proud of yourself or disappointed that you can't save the patient. There will be time when you can't save the patient. You have to be prepared to deal with the worst case scenario.

It's a highly intense and stressful job. You will be on your feet most of the time and you will be working without a lot of rest because there are a lot of patients waiting in the ER room. They are waiting to see you. You will also have other colleagues of course. You won't be the only emergency physician but it's a fast pace environment and you have to be comfortable with that kind of work load. If you like a slower pace work then you shouldn't go into ER. You will see how stressful it is when you are in medical school or when you are doing your residency. If you decide that it might not be the right field for you in medical school then you should pick another specialty. You should pick a specialty that you can do well. It's not a good idea to force yourself into a specialty in the medical field since mistakes will cost you your job and other things too.

You have to evaluate yourself and see if you can handle the ER and if it's something that you will be happy with. There are so many occasions that students drop their specialty or fail because they don't like it enough. They lack the passion for it. You should go into a field that you are passionate about. You will progress more than someone who doesn't love it. You have to love your field. You have to love it enough that you will do it with great care and maintain your job without problems. It's difficult in medicine and even more difficult in the emergency room.
